Displacement-Based Design for Deep Excavations

W. Allen Marr1 and Martin Hawkes2
Geocomp Corporation, 125 Nagog Park, MA 01720; PH (978) 635-0012; Fax (978) 635-0266;
1wam@geocomp.com
2mh@geocomp.com

ABSTRACT: Many structures located close to excavations are damaged by excessive ground movements during construction. This is partly due to limitations of commonly used methods to design the excavation support system. The authors propose using a displacement-based design method that focuses on designing to keep movements within allowable values. A step-by-step approach for the method is described and illustrated for a deep excavation into soft clay.